Bust of James J. Hill

Not later than August 1, there will have been raised on the grounds of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, an heroic bust of James J. Hill, the genius of the northwest.

Finn Haakon Froll, a sculptor, of note, is now in New York engaged upon the model after a series of sittings with the builder of the Great Northern railroad in his St. Paul home.

The bust is to be in bronze and the preliminary models prepared by Froll, are pronounced marvelous likenesses.

The most of the work is being met by private subscription among the leading business men of the northwest who hold the empire builder almost in veneration.

1840 Crete was again taken from Mehmet Ali and replaced under the dominion of the Turks. The Cretans' desire for freedom resulted in four successive revolts, one in 1829, which was speedily repressed; another in 1866, which continued for some time, and two more, in 1887 and 1888.

Following the revolt of 1888 Shalir Pasha was sent to the island by the Turks as military governor, and he proclaimed martial law. In 1889 he violated the provisions of the Halepa pact, which had been indorsed by the powers. Legislative representation was ignored and all the customs receipts of the island were appropriated by Turkey. The island was ruled despotically. Christians refused to go to the polls and general troubles ensued. Finally the European powers interfered, and in 1894 a Christian was made governor. The legislative assembly was once more established, but trouble at once arose over the question of finances. The revolt assumed formidable proportions and the efforts of the powers failed to stop it.

Finally, in 1897, Greece made an effort to take the island away from Turkish control, and out of this grew the war between Greece and Turkey. Greece sent troops to Crete, but Turkey was victorious in the war, and as a result the Greek troops were withdrawn and Turkish garrisons took their place. They indulged in renewed outrages on the Christians and the old troubles broke out again.

As a result of these new troubles the four powers—Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy—again intervened, and constituted the island, with the adjacent islets, an autonomous state under a high commissioner of the powers, subject to the suzerainty of the porte. Prince George of Greece was appointed high commissioner and it was thought for a time that the troubles of the island were at an end. Prince George made wise use of his dictatorship, and the powers were well pleased with their choice. He was appointed for a term of three years, and in 1901 the appointment was renewed. But again the old antagonism between Moslem and Christian kindled the internal fires and the result was that the powers were forced to station troops on the island to put down the disorders.

MAN ONCE IN BUSINESS IN DOUGLAS CAPTURED.

Within the next few days, Sheriff Henry Thompson of Globe, who is bringing J. C. Phillipson, formerly of Douglas, from Edmonton, Canada, to face a charge of embezzlement, should arrive here with his prisoner.

Over a week has elapsed since the sheriff left Edmonton and as no delays are expected, his arrival any day is not unlikely for.

From letters which have been received from Phillipson, he is apparently preparing to fight the charges which are standing against him.

He secured his release from the Edmonton jail on $8000 bail before Sheriff Thompson arrived and when the latter reached Edmonton, the prisoner was waiting at the station to greet his captor.

As Phillipson was able to secure his release from the Edmonton jail on $8000 bail, he will likely give bond on or Mehmet Ali, viceroy of Egypt. In arriving at Globe.

To any such attempt the Young Turks, who are fearful of any further loss of prestige and territory to the empire, will offer the strongest resistance, and advances recently received from Salonica tell of warlike preparations being pushed on with feverish haste.

Crete has been a theatre of bloody strife since the days of Homer. Torn by civil dissensions, the island maintained its independence under the various Macedonian monarchs, but finally became a Roman province. Subsequently it passed under Venetian rule. It was not till 1645 that the Turks made a serious attempt to effect a conquest. Then they landed with an army of 50,000 men, reduced Candia and Refimo, and laid siege to Candia, which capitulated after a resistance of twenty years, the most protracted siege on record. The fall of Candia meant the submission of the entire island.

From this time the island continued subject to Ottoman rule till the outbreak of the Greek revolution in 1821. The struggle then was prolonged till in 1830 the allied powers—France, Russia and England—transferred the island to the government of Mehmet Ali, viceroy of Egypt. In arriving at Globe.
